Western scientific observers here, however, generally concluded that the flight was ending either because of a failure in the docking mechanism of the spacecraft or a serious deterioration in the condition of the Salyut orbital station, which was sent into space last June.

The curtailment of the Soyuz-15 flight had some ramifications for the American space program, since it was specifically identified by a senior Soviet space official, Maj. Gen. Vladimir Shatalov, as part of Soviet preparation for the Apollo-Soyuz mission scheduled for next July. Though the two nations are cooperating in the Apollo-Soyuz

Aug. 28 (NYT) .- Police Force, a pro-Makarlos Greek Cypriot military and civilian leaders of different political affiliations are planning to wage guerrilla warfare against the Turkish occupation forces here when and if the leaders feel there can he no peaceful solution to the island's crisis.

The planners are not members of the present Greek Cypriot government but the government is believed to have knowledge of their actions and intentions.

Sources close to the planners said that the organization is to be called the Cypriot Liberation Army, that it has already enlisted about 300 armed men, and is based in the Troodos Mountains in the center of the island, which is controlled by Greeks.

The sources said more than $1 million to finance the army has already been received from Greeks in the United States, Britam and mainland Greece. Collections of money and jewelry are also being made among Greek Cypriots here, the sources added. Last week, the sources said, 18 soldiers of the new army were sent to Lebanon for tactical training with Palestinian commando groups.

Eventually, the sources said. the army will have 500 men. The leadership of the army is said to include officers from EOKA-B, the group that helped depose Arche'shop Makarios last month, and from the Tactical

France to Back EEC-Greek Pact

PARIS, Aug. 28 (AP) .- France will ask its partners in the European Economic Community to reactivate an association agreement with Greece that has been blocked since the 1967 colonels' coup, government spokesman André Rossi announced today.

"This problem will be debated at the meeting of the Common Market Council of Ministers. which is to be held Sept. 15-16," Mr. Rossi said. The French proposal was made in this country's capacity as current head of the EEC Commission.

The action was in line with a consistently pro-Greek policy by the French government since the war on Cyprus crupted last month and the Greek military regime paramilitary organization, Recruiting is also going on among National Guardsmen and refugees who are not politically affiliated. Ford Rejects Controls On Wages and Prices

By Fred Farris

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28 (IHT). President Ford declared flatly today that he would not reimpose wage and price controls in the battle against inflation.

In his first news conference since becoming chief executive. Mr. Ford also said that he subscribes to the view that former President Richard Nixon had already suffered enough over Wa-

But he would not say whether he would grant Mr. Nixon a pardoo if the former President is prosecuted and convicted on criminal charges stemming from the political scandal,

Mr. Ford said that he must make "the final decision" and "I make no commitment now one way or the other" on a pardon for Mr. Nixon.

Rejecting the idea of putting controls back on inflation-bloated prices and wages, Mr. Ford said that they did not work after Mr. Nixon reluctantly imposed these controls in 1971. No Justification

He said that the "economic principles" learned in the interval demonstrated that they do not work and added, "I see no justification today, regardless of the rightness or wrongness of the decision ln 1971, to reimpose wage-price controls today."

At another point, he declared: "Wage and price controls are out, He said that the administra-tion is determined to curb government spending—the fiscal 1975 budget, he said, will be under $300 billion—and that no government department, includ-ing the Pentagon, has a "sacrowithout intending some sort of sanct" budget. However, he said, he will insist

"that sufficient money be made available to the Army, Navy and Air Force so that we remain strong to meet any challenge by any adversary."

Asked about the impact of continuing high world oil prices and the decision by some oilproducing nations to curb production to keep prices high, Mr. Ford said it "points np very vividly" this country's need to get on with making itself self-sufficient on energy matters. Coordinated Approach He said that the effort begun this last February to develop a coordinated approach by oil-consumer industrialized nations must be pressed. The President warned that this group "must meet fre-quently and act as much as possible in concert" because any economically adverse repercussions" stemming from inflated oil prices and poor investment policies could bring "very serious" economic troubles for the nations of the world.

Asked how he thought he could best use Nelson Rockefeller as his Vice-President, Mr. Ford said that Mr. Rockefeller with his vast experience in foreign policy. can make a significant contribution to some of our decisionmaking" in that field. Mr. Rockefeller can do "effective work in the area of the domestic council" since the administration must prepare new legislative proposals for the new Congress which convenes io January.

Frelimo Chief Says Fighting Will Continue

DAR ES SALAAM, Aug. 28 AP .- The Portuguese government has not yet accepted conditions set by the Mozambique Liberation Pront [Frelimol for ending the 10-year-old war. Frelimo President Samora Machel said on his return from Zaire yesterday.

Ha said Frelimo mlittary and political activities in Mozambique were now heavy and would remain so until the Portuguese accepted Frelimo's conditions.

Mr. Machel was in Zaire for talks with government officials. Frelimo has said that before nesotiations for Mozambique's independence can begin the Portuguese must accept three principles: Power must be trausferred to the Mozamblque people, Freli-mo is the only legitimate representative of the people, and negotiations should discuss only how power is to be transferred to Frelimo. There has been speculation in recent weeks that Prelimo and the Portuguese had reached agreement on an interim coalition government for Mozambique but Mr. Machel's statement indicates the speculation was premature.

Airline Strike Continues

LISBON Aug. 28 (AP).—A strike that has paralyzed the operations of the Portuguese airline TAP today threatened to cut all of Portugal's air links with the rest of the world.

Sources said there was a strong possibility that unless the TAP dispute over the "unfair firing" of employees was resolved quickly, the stoppage would spread next Monday to all airlines using Lisbon Airport.

Portugal's military government last night ordered the army to take over control of TAP and police and troops were posted at key points to the airport. While the army could order the strikers back to work. it has not done so. UN Population Conference

By Gladwin Hill

-Women received a major boost in status, and birth-control advocates suffered a small tactical sethack as the United Nations World Population Conference argued today over the terms of its major declaration, Pemala equality was elevated from little more than footnote mention in the conference's 93-point "plan of action" to one of a dozen basi: "principles" designed to guide nations in formulating population policies.

But after extended debate in a committee open to all 135 participating nations, a long-established UN tenet on disseminating birthcontrol assistance was weakened. A spokesman for the United States, which was oo the losing side of a 58-42 vote on the issue, called the gesture "retrogressive" plication of governments' callousness toward poor people. The spokesman said it did not alter. the UN's oft-enunciated support for voluntary birth-control programs. A week of agitation at the conference managed to get solid recognition for women's equality, Champions of women's status, from Margaret Mesd, the anthropolygist, to Betty Freidan, the women's-lib crusatier, have been deploring the fact that the 135nation parley's proposed 93-item "plan of action" mentioned women explicitly in only a few secondary paragraphs. Aside from that, population was treated simply as an abstract product of "couples," and offspring as a component of "the family." The short verbal shrift given the female sex's critical role in future augmentation or limitation of the world's population was one of several compromises woven into the draft "plan of action" after extensive precon-ference debate. This debate evidently averted friction over the widely contrasting statuses of women in different parts of the while cries for female equality resounded from the conference's adjunct forum for nongovernmental people, tha cause also was being pushed in the cooference Committee of the Whole, assigned to recast the action plan The result was the insertion by consensus of an additional

"principle" in the plan: Women have the right to complete integration in the development process, particularly by means of equal participation in educational, social economic. cultural and political life, In addition, the necessary measures should be taken to facilitate this integration with family responsi-bilities, which should be fully shared by both partners."

Female equality is considered an important avenue to reducing birth rates, both because woman with other interests will have fewer babies and because their enlarged contribution to national

U.S. Health Insurance Plans Popular, but Stalled in House

By Richard D. Lyons

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28 (NYT). -National haalth insurance doesn't seem to have an enemy

The President, all congressional leaders of both parties, most senators and representatives and nearly every special interest group, whether conservative or liberal support the concept. In broad outline, the notion envisions using the federal mandate, and perhaps the public purse, to help underwrite the medical ex-penses of those persons who can't afford to pay for diagnosis and

Yet events here this month indicate that national health in-surance is about as close to enactment as it was when the concept was first endorsed by the Bull Moose party in 1912. Seemingly, national health insurance is an issue about as apolitical as breathing and motherhood. But, as with air pollution and abortion, it is engulfed in political con-

Six months ago, for example, President Nixon sent to Congress the administration's new health insurance bill, a considerably liheralized version of the one he first introduced in 1971. But the Nixon administration's resurgent interest in a program it had left dormant for three years was spurred by only one motive in the view of many observers and politicians here: It would give the voters a something-for-everyone package distract their attention from the Watergate scandal

Attempt by Nixon Mr. Nixon's attempt to drum up support for the administration bill fell flat, in part because of the gathering storm of impeachment, in part because it was regarded in Congress as an empty

The former president resurrected health insurance on the advice of Melvin Laird, the former secretary of defense who was called into the White House as a presidential counselor last year to direct a rescue attempt that

On assuming office, Mr. Ford, in his first address to Congress several weeks ago, again sought congressional support for health insurance, again on the advice of Mr. Laird and for somewhat the same reason; that is, to offer to the voters some indication that the new administration was moving ahead in domestic affairs. Thus both Mr. Nixon and Mr. Ford proclaimed national health insurance as their top domestic priority. But both got nowhere because they apparently miscal-culated the extent of conflicts within the House Ways and Means Committee and could not cajole a bill onto the House floor.

The Ways and Means Committee has been inundated with national health insurance hills whose cost and comprehensiveness vary greatly.

As an insight into the wide range of views of the committee members, nearly all are themselves sponsors or cosponsors of one or more of the bills before them, including the committee chairman, Rep. Wilbur Mills. D-Ark

Some committee conservatives stili balked at the use of federal payroll taxes and Treasury funds to pay even a small part of the program. For their part, the committee liberals have been playing a waiting game, figuring that the Democrats have an excellent chance to pick up seats in the November elections, and that their ideas will stand a better chance next year, not this.

Must U.S. Bail Out Pan Am?

Now it is Pan American World Airways richer. That assumption, throughout the that needs a heavy and continuous federal subsidy to avoid going broke. "Pan American is a national asset of great importance," its petition argues. To keep this asset in working order will take a subsidy of $10 million a month immediately, the airline told the Civil Aeronautics Board. It is necessary to consider carefully what this money would Pan Am's urgent cry for help presents an entirely different question from the prohlem of Amtrak or the Penn Central case where the issue is maintaining a unique railway freight system vital to the whole national economy. It is also different from the Lockheed issue, which involved the preservation of great technical capabilities. The argument for subsidizing Pan Am comes down to national prestige. To make up your mind about the subsidies, ask yourself what it is worth to have Pan Am fly into foreign cities that, otherwise, no American airline would serve. Is that worth $10 million a month? Is it worth the larger subsidies that lie a little farther down the same road? What about the other major American international carrier. Trans World Airlines, which has also petitloned for subsidies?

Except in this country, nearly all of the world's international airlines are either nwned by their governments or heavily subsidized as a matter of national policy. Pan Am and TWA plaintlyely observe that they are not dealing with normal commercial competition. But it is also true that the cities to which they fly abroad are adequately served by other airlines as well. It other governments are willing to pay, should the United States match their payments in order to duplicate the service?

Pam Am cites two direct causes of its distress: The price of fuel has risen drastically and the number of people traveling abroad has fallen sharply, particularly hetween the United States and Europe. The drop in travel results, in turn, from inflation and the effects of a declining dollar on tourists' vacation plans, Pam Am argues, with justice, that none of these circumstances is its

But the company's crisis has, as one might expect, deeper causes. It is precisely the policies that achieved its great successes that hring Pan Am into peril now. Its hasic strategy has always been to build blgger. It has consistently pressed toward more routes to more places. It has been a leader in introducing blgger planes. Its massive investment in Boeing 747 jumbo jets forced other airlines around the world to follow it. The strategy assumed a steadily increasing volume of travel in a world growing endiessly 1960s, seemed not only safe but obvious, Then, within the past several years, traffic suddenly began to level off. That has left Pan Am legally committed to vast networks of under-utilized routes, which it flies with huge planes that it cannot fill. The company estimates that out of every 100 seats on Pan Am flights this year, 46 will he empty. The prospects for filling those seats are getting progressively more gloomy The price of transatlantic air fares has risen 25 per cent within the past year, and the international rate agency has agreed to increase them another 10 per cent in November.

The time has come for a worldwide rationalization of international air service. Many governments have pushed their airlines into much more extensive routes-for reasons of politics, prestige and general flagwavingthan they can sustain commercially. Most of the international airlines are being afflicted hy tha same dire troubles as Pan Am, and their governments are now burdened with a scale of deficits that they had never anticloated. A good case can be made for perpetuating flights by American carriers to some of the major capitals and central terminals ahroad. But that is a long way from saying that the national interest requires maintaining every present route and connection, regardless of the cost to the U.S. Treasury. At a time when the American government is struggling to cut its current hudget hy $5 hillion, it would he ludicrous to commit $120 million in new subsidies to preserve under-used and overlapping air routes abroad.

National prestige is a nebulous quality at best, and America's does not depend on the number of American airliners landing at foreign airports. It might hetter rest on a well-ordered and efficient economy. The issue now is reminiscent of the long debate over the SST, the supersonic transport. The argument held that our national prestige required it. When the United States decided not to proceed with the SST, the world discovered that our prestige survived. Not only that, hut a great many other countries discovered that they too could get along without supersonic commercial flight. Perhaps the same thing will prove to be true of lavish and redundant airline service. As our economy moves through the rough weather ahead, it is possible that other companies as reputable and useful as Pan Am will find themseives in similar difficulties. The Pan Am decision will inevitably set a precedent for others to come. That makes it doubly important not to start a pattern here of heavy federal aid to large companies whose

Portent for South Africa

With the signing in Algiers of an agreement providing for the formal independence of Guinea-Bissau next month, Portugal has taken its first major step to dissolve the empire that it established in Africa five centuries ago. This dramatic event furnishes a clear portent for coming events farther south in Africa, including Portugal's disengagement from its two other territories nn that continent, Angola and Mozambique.

The Algiers ceremony had a touch of anticlimax about it. The African Party for the Independence of Guinea-Bissau and the Cape Verde Islands (PAIGC), which hegan its armed struggle against heavy odds in 1963, has controlled much of the small West African country for years, and unliaterally proclaimed its independence last September -a declaration recognized by many govern-

In areas they still controlled, Portuguese authorities had heen handing over administration to the PAIGC ever since the armed forces ousted Premler Caetano's authoritarian regime in Lisbon last April. Portuguese troops are already being flown home and. with Lisbon's approval, the Security Council earlier this month recommended Guinea-Bissau for United Nations membership.

With the Algiers agreement, President Spinola's government has given further proof of good faith on its promises of independence for all the Portuguese African territories at the earliest practical moment. An interim government to guide Mozambique to independence will be installed shortly. It will include representatives of the Front for the Liberation of Mozamhique (Frellmo), which has led the ilberation struggle.

More time will he required for Angola, partly hecause of its much larger whita population, partly because three separate hiack liberation movements have heen unable so far to work together for their common goal.

With Portugal pulling out of Africa, the bell will toll more loudly for the remaining white minority governments in South Africa and Rhodesia. Once Mozamblque is independent, the pressures will intensity overnight on Prima Minister Smith's Rhodesian regime next door. Both white governments should learn from Portugal's example and begin realistic negotiations with their black majorities while time remains.

International Opinion

Guinea-Bissau Independence

Portugal is severing the strings with its least manageable African territory, the watery triangle of Guinea-Bissau. With the Algiers agreement now signed and Sept. 12 named as independence day, no test of public opinion will take place. At least the Cape Verde Islands, distinct in character and valuable as an international air link, are being treated as a separate territory for the time being. Guinea-Bissau has only a small foreign community and has an already acknowledged bead of state in Luiz Cabral. brother of the assassinated founder of the PAIGC movement. Other Portuguese overseas territories are less fortunate in not knowing which of several aspirants could be their first president.

Samora Machel, the Frelimo guarrilla leader, is the ohvious candidate in Mozambique, but there has first to he an interim government headed by a major of the Lisbon junta. In Angola, richest and most deveioped provinca with a population of 600,000 Europeans, the political spectrum is most confused. It is in Angola that Gen. Spinola is rightly showing most concern for representative procedures. Three nationalist movements there can produce at least three rivals for the post of president. . . .

LONDON.—The British rate of inflation is now almost double America's, and the chances are that things will get worse before they get desperate, so the people are coming up with some ingenious ways to live through the crisis and even beat it.

The Economist magazine suggests, not very helpfully, 'Don't just sit there: Build an ark." Don't count on the politicians, It warns, they are going to fight an election in October "on issues that have no relevance to the problems ahead."

The London Business School, in an economic forecast by Prof. James Ball and Terry Burns, tells the people not to imagine that the present crisis will go away. They foresee consumer prices ris-20 percent in 1975 and predict that there will be a million unemployed here the winter after next.

Other Remedies

Meanwhile, the ordinary people, at the suggestion of the London Sunday Times, have some remedies of their own. Richard Dawson of Brighton suggests that frieodly neighbors form fourfamily urban communes. What they couldn't afford separately, at present prices, he thinks, they might be able to afford together.

They don't need four cars and four television sets, he says. Sell two of each and share the rest. Keep one lawn mower and set of tools, plow up two of the four back yards for vegetables, buy a deep freeze, organize a car pool, and make home brew.

Donald Rayfield of Baughurst suggests keeping an eye on the biggest items: car, housing, food, holidays, clothes, and vices. He estimates that to run a £1,200 ($2,800) car costs £700 a year. "Sell it." he commands. and buy a sound banger for f150 and cut your running costs by buying spares from

On housing, "Buy, don't rent." he insists. Mortgage interest still lags behind the inflation. Some One-Handed Applause

Campaign Reform Bill Is Viewed With Caution

By David S. Broder

WASHINGTON-One of the August rush of events in Weshington was the campaign reform bill. It passed the House, with a minimum of public notice, just hours before Mr. Nixon resigned the presidency.

Even now, there are important implications—and problems—in the legislation that are worth thinking about, because the bill is not yet law. Differences between the House bill and the version passed by the Senate last year must be resolved in a conference committee next month. Then it will be up to Mr. Ford to decide whether to sign it.

The House bill, like its Senate counterpart, guarantees full public financing of the next presidential general election, through the use of the $1 checkoff provided on U.S. income tax forms, and makes it possible, if enough funds are available, for candidates in the presidential primaries to meet half their costs on a matching basis from the Tressury.

Sets Limits

The bill also sets limits on spending for campaigns for House, Senate and president, and on the amounts individuals and organizations may contribute to candidates for those offices.

It provides an independent hinartisan enforcement agency whose makeup and powers satisfy the strongest proponents of clean elections reform that it will be effective.

The main difference between the House and Senate bills, aside from dollar figures on certain spending and contribution limits, concerns the financing of congressional races. The Senate hill provided partial public financing of House and Senate campaigns; the House, reluctant to see challengers subsidized from the Treasury, rejected that, and its view is likely to prevail in con-

The final version of the House bill is better than could have been expected had its chief draftsman, Ben. Wayne Hays, D-Ohio, been as narrow in his viewpoint as his critics suggest-ed. Hays is also chairman of the Democratic congressional campaign committee, and was the target of continued insinuations of conflict of interest.

Not Cutted -

But in the end ha did not delay reform legislation irretrievably, nor did he gut it. And the pressures applied to him with great skill by outside lobbying organizations and by reformminded members of both parties had the effect of substantially improving the bill

Nonetheless, reading the bate in the House and analyzing the provisions of the bill leava a feeling of disquiet which will not be overcome by the admonition that legislation is the art of the possible.

What is troublesome is that thera are still basic issues that legislation and that will call Congress back to this issue, with results that may or may not be conductive to the cause of genuine

Take the question of spending limits, for example. No real consensus was reached on this question. The Senate set the spending limit for House races at-$90,000. The House, by floor. amendment, reduced the figure to $60,000 and came within 18

votes of chopping it all the way down to $42,500. Now, the fact of the matter to that the lower the spending limit, the greater security for incumbeots. Members of the House have staff, mailing privi-leges and other perquisites worth several hundred thousand dollars The average cost of a successful campaign against an incumben in 1972 was over $100,000.

Congress is about to set ; ending limit substantially love than that. And once the precedent is set that incumbents can decide how much may be spen to run against them, what i there to prevent that figure from being reduced to whatever poin they feel guarantees their futur security?

There is a similar problem with relationship to political par ties. The lawmakers just couldn decide how the parties fit int this new financing scheme.

The House Committee rejecter even the weak Senate provision requiring that expenditures o public money by a presidentis candidate must be approved b an official of his party's national committee. Thus, public fund under the House bill, could go t personal campaign organization like the Committee for the Re election of the President.

The legislation seems to sa that political parties have nmore standing in our system than private interest groups. On a Wing and a Prayer

By George F. Will

WASHINGTON - Pan Am, the "world's most experienced airline," is limping into Washington on a wing and a prayer for a gargantuan subsidy. Pan Am's chairman William Seawell says the airline must have a subsidy of $101 million a month, retroactive to April, or else Pan Am, "as we know it, can-not survive." But the question is: Do we want Pan Am "as we know

It" or, for that matter, at all? Pan Am's dreadful financial plight is not just the result of quadrupled fuel prices since Ooto-ber, 1973. From 1968 through 1973 Pan Am lost $174 millio This year it is flying loss but will spend $200 million more on fuel than it spent last year. And passenger traffic on the crucial North Atlantic route is declining.

Demand Drops

Rising European prosperity-and inflation—and the devaluetion of the dollar have increased the cost of European travel. On Nov. 1 coach class fares will rise 20 per cent, the second major increase this year. At today's prices the demand for air travel is very price-clastic: Demand declines sharply as prices rise.

With an audacity that is almost charming, Seewell speaks of subsidies as "national interest payments" and argues that they are necessary because Pan Am is necessary to our balance of payments, self-respect and (you guessed it) national security.

He offers Congress an apocalyptic prophecy. Give us this day-our subsidy or Pan Am will crash, costing 32,500 jobs, a $400 mHlion balance-of-payments loss, a national humiliation, and a diminished military ability to use private air fleets for another (say) Berlin sirlift. But if Pan Am goes bankrupt there still will be ample planes for emergency military use. And at least some of Pan Am's employees and traffic would be absorbed by other U.S. airlines.

The alternative to hankruptey seems to be to put Pan Am on a massiva dole, probably forever. Other government messures would help a bit, but would not problem is insoluble. More precisely, it our government departs from its established practice and considers the interest of the taxpayers. Pan Am may be domed. Fan Am depends on a high volume of transatiantic traffic,

But it competes for that traffic against more than 20 scheduled airlines that are substantially or entirely owned by foreign governments. For prestige and other political reasons, most of thes governments are willing to operat them at a loss. So Pan Am cithe must be comparably which means hugely and permanentlysubsidized, or it must charge mor than its competitors, and we, a taxpavers and as travelers, car get along without Pan Am. If foreign governments think they get prestige from operating airlines at a loss, that is bad to

Pan Am but it is nice for the res. of us. If foreign government want to fly people across the Atlantic for less than it costs 4 do so, let's let them provide al the transatiantic traffic. I American travelers—a generall affluent lot—are going to benefit from government subsidies, let th subsidies come from foreign gov eruments.

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE, THURSDAY, AUGUST 29, 1974 Study Finds Carbon Monoxide Pollution Menaces Blood of Many in U.S.

By Victor Cohn

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28 (WP) — Carbon monoxide, has so saturated Americans' blood that nearly half of nonsmokers have more of it in their systems than federal safety standards would

Smokers have two to four times more—so much that in some cases they should not be allowed to give their polluted blood to heart

These are among findings dis-closed yesterday from a federally sponsored survey of 29,000 persons in 18 areas, including the nation's largest cities. .

The average nonsmoker's blood carbon monoxide level, the study showed, was 1.5 per cent or more —so high that it could be lifethreatening to 1 to 3 per cent of the population.

Carbon monoxide displaces oxygen in red blood cells. At high levels, this is fatal. At low levels, it causes no known harm to average bealthy persons.

But in persons with advanced heart or blood vessel diseases, or in the elderly, or in some infants, it may cause "untoward effects they cannot tolerate," said Dr. Richard Stewart, main anthor of the report in the current Journal of the American Medical Asso-

Dr. Stewart, professor of enical College of Wisconsin, called the study's results "astounding" in showing that e great percentage of the U.S. population is chronically exposed to excessive

These carbon monoxide levels expected from our previous stud-tes, which merely measured carbon monoxide in the air at specific sites," agreed Dr. John Finklea, director of the Environmental Protection Agency's Health Effects Studies. The study, made during 1969-

1972, found the highest carbon monoxide levels in Denver and Los Angeles. In both cities. 76 per cent of nonsmokers' blood showed levels above 1.5 per cent, with an average of 2 per cent in Denver and 1.8 in Los Angeles. Other high cities were Chicago 74 per cent of nonsmokers' blood above 1.5 per cent and a 1.7 per cent average. New Orleans (59 per cent above 1.5 per cent; 1.6 cent average, Detroit per cent above 15 per cent; 1.6 per cent everage). San Francisco (61 per cent above 1.5 per cent; 1.5 per cent average) and Seattle

(55 per cent above 1.5 per cent; 1.5 per cent everage). The Washington erea averaged lower than most large cities, with 35 per cent of the population ebove 1.5 per cent and a 1.2 per cent everage. New York's figures were the same But results could be worse in specific parts of these cities and for specific groups, Dr. Stewart and his colleagues pointed out. "vehicle-related" workers had high levels. The highest of all were found in taxi drivers, who take in carbon monoxide with almost every working breath. Eight nonsmoking New York City cabbles returning from work had carbon monoxide saturations of 13 to 5.8 per cent. Twelve eiga-rette-smoking cabbies displayed an average 8 per cent, with the highest showing 13 per cent.

Other high readings were found among workers in industries where carbon monoxide is part of industrial pollution—metal, chemi-cal, stone and glass processors, printers and other graphic arts semblers and repairmen. Others often exposed, Dr. Pinklea said, are those who live where there are faulty furnaces common in inner-city areas—and those who are exposed to a lot of cigarette-smoking indoors. However, eutos are the largest contributor," be added. The 1971 Air Quality Act ordered a curb on carbon monoxide. The limit set is 1.5 per cent saturation of nonsmokers blood by carboxybemoglobin, the chemical produced when the poisonous gas enters blood cells.

"Our study." said Dr. Stewart, "shows that if we temporize we are going to affect some per-

The King Still Swings

By Jonathan Kwitny

NEW YORK (AP-DJ) .-Thirtynine years have passed since Benny Goodman, then 26 years old and a clarinet-blowing highschool dropout from Chicago, led a little-known band of musicians on a cross-country tour that seemed destined for disaster. Before the tour began, the Goodman band had played a late-night series of radio concerts in New York. But most listeners in the eastern half of the country bad gone to bed by the time the band really warmed up. As a result, the first audiences for the touring group were sparse, and Benny Goodman's career seemed to be headed downbill fast.

Unknown to the musicians, however, their radio concerts had become a hit in California, three time zones away from New York. So when the touring band memhers arrived on the West Coast, they were astonished by the jammed ballrooms and adoring mobs that greeted them and that were to attend them for a decade to come. Benny Goodman, almost overnight, became the "King of

That was the mid-1930s; and through the end of that decade and into the next, Benny Goodman as much as anyone popu-larized the rhythmic form of jazz called swing. Eventually, the Benny Goodman Quartet—with Goodman ou clarinet, Gens Krupa on drums, Lionel Hampton on vibraphone and Teddy Wilson at the piano-became one of the most famous groups in jazz history.

"He definitely was the forerunner of swing music, and from that was an outcropping of big bands, and small groups after that," says trumpeter Chris Griffen, who began playing with Goodman in 1934, "... There was no question that in those days Benny was king. He opened the door. I would say."

A Decade

The door stayed wide open for Benny Goodman for about a decade. Then, in the mid-1940s, swing began to fade in popularity, and Benny Goodman's star began to fade with it-not, however, before Goodman had attained legendary status. For while swing might become passe, the King of Swing could rest on his laurels and his bankroll, secure in the knowledge that his name was a part of American musical fusing to retire into the comfortable mists of legend. He still playe concerts every week or so. He still plays swing. And while his concerts are most likely held in high-school assembly halls or company auditoriums, and while he no longer is chased down the street by screaming fans, he still is accustomed to enthusiastic applause. In short, he is by no means a has-been, although his career is currently at less than Goodman's current repertoire includes a few recent compositions, mostly from the score of the Broadway usical "A Little Night Music." But by and large he sticks to the tried and true songs from the swing era: "Don't Be That Way," "Avalon," "Stompin' at the Savoy."

Goodman explains why he sticks to swing: "A hell of a lot more musicianship goes into what I call swing than rock 'n' roll. These kids play too much of this amplified junk all over the place, in most cases because they've learned (to play) without having a good sound. They can't play

As a result of this attitude. some of the musicians who have played in the Goodman band in recent years have complained that the Goodman programs are outdated and stodgy. But as Hank Jones, the band's current planist, explains: "I don't think we've done a concert from 1955 on where people haven't shouted np those (old) tunes for us to do, so how can you not do them?

No Dancing

Goodman band hasn't played for dancing in several years. "It's just gotten unfashionable to dance, I guess," Goodman says. (When he did play for dancing, Goodman led a group that numbered about two dozen; today, the band varies in size from six to 10 musicians,) When he isn't playing jazz concerts, he performs from time to time with symphony orchestras, on occa-sion playing the several classical concertos that have been written especially for him.

According to his band members, Mr. Goodman draws up to $7,000 for a concert, from which he pays six or eight sidemen $200 to $300 each plus air fare. (They say they pay their own hotel bills.) Goodman himself declines to discuss the particulars of his financial status, but be acknowledges investments in art, real estate and stocks. He divides his time between a Connecticut home, where he lives with his wife, the former Alice Hammond, and a well-appointed spartment on Manhattan's East Side, where he handles his own bookings with a staff of two and practices the clarinet for hours.

in September.

In short, Benny Goodman's life today is comfortable, if far removed from the pandemonium that surrounded his years in the limelight. And Mr. Goodman is philosophical about the changer wrought by passing time and fluctuating tastes. "At the height of what the music magazines called the 'Benny Goodman Era,' it was very difficult for me to appear in public," he reminisces. "Kids used to try to get into cabs with me, and even though I used to take off my glasses to keep from being recognized fans followed me everywhere. It was very tiring . . . Of course, anybody who would expect that to continue to the extent I was caught in it there would be out, of his mind, wouldn't he?"

Benny Goodman's dedication to his music even in the face of diminished adulation is understandable; music has been part and parcel of his life from his earliest years. He was born in Chicago on May 30, 1909, the eighth of 11 children of immi-grant parents. When the Chicago synagogue that the Goodmans attended passed out musical instruments on loan to young members of the congregation, Benny was the smallest of the three Goodman brothers then attending. His elder brothers opted for Benny with a clarinet.

It was a fortuitous leftover. By the age of 10, still in short pants, Benny Goodman was giving classical clarinet recitals for adult aodiences. Soon after, he was playing with local jazz groops. By the time he was 16, his reputation had reached Ben Pollack, a well known band leader on the West Coast, When Mr. Pollack sent for Benny, Benny left school, went West and became a clarinetist in the Pollack band (Glenn Miller played trombone in the same outfit).

In 1929, at the age of 20, Benny Goodman had attained a national reputation at his instrument. In that year, he quit the Polleck band "for no particuler reason." he says; went to work with various other groups and made some records. Five years later, he was leading his own band and playing Hilly Rose's Music Hall, the splashy New York nightclub. Then came the radio show, sponsored by Na-tional Biscuit Co., and the crosscountry tour that was to end in his being catapulted to stardom. Certainly one of the high points of Mr. Goodman's career came in 1938 when, at sge 28, he headlined the first jazz concert to be held in Cernegie Hall. Practically every sideman in his band that night was a star many went on to lead their own bands—and records from the concert grossed more than $1 million, a huge sale at the time. Goodman says the concert start-

Some couples accept the situa-tion calmly, as though it were as natural as dollars and cents. Other couples, however, apparently have not been able to come to terms with the fact that the woman, traditionally the nurturer of the family, is also its No. 1

This became apparent in conversations with more than a score of American women who are the major money earners in their families. Although many of them seemed proud of their jobs, their status and their high salaries, more than half of them declined to allow their names to be used or their husbands to be interviewed on the grounds that the men's feelings might be hurt

S. Vietnam Finds First Oil Traces

By David K. Shipler

SAIGON, Aug. 28 (NYT).—The first traces of oil have been discovered off the coast of South Vietoam, government officials disclosed today. The announcement was made at a nationally televised news conference that had the festive air of a celebration. However, U.S. geologists and oil company executives were restrained, stressing that months of further drilling and testing were required before they could tell whether the oil reserves were large enough to have commercial value.

. If so, it will take several years to begin production, they explained, and the volume is likely to be considerably smaller than in the Middle East. Nevertheless, oil production would lend some resilience to South Vietnam's economy by providing badly needed foreign exchange. In addition, Nguyen Duc Cnong, Minister of Trade and Industry, expressed the hope today that the discovery would encourage foreign investment here by enhancing the country's image.

According to Mr. Cuong and Patrick Glover, vice-president of an exploration concern, Pecten Vietnam, the oil was found 4,500 feet beneath the floor of the South China Sea after eight days of drilling at a site 190 miles south of the coastal resort of Vung Tan.

It was the first exploratory hole drilled by a joint venture of Shell and Citles Service, which is the first of four concerns that have won exploration rights in a vast area off the coast. Mr. Cuong said he expected the others to begin drilling soon-Mobil in late September or early traces were "a medium eight crude, which would indicate a favorable type of oil. We're highly encouraged by this." He noted also that the type of rock discovered by the drilling provided further indication of the existence of oil deposits.

October, Esso in December and Sunningdale, a Canadian firm, next March. Jack Congan, a Shell geologist, said the oil

[In New York, however, Shell Oil Co. said the well "isn't productive of oil," AP-Dow Jones reported. A spokesman said the well is being abandoned, but he added: "This doesn't mean the structure isn't productive." He said there will be further drilling on the structure.]

Cutback Seen a Face-Saving Formula

Oil Prices Decline as Production Drops

By Clyde H. Farnsworth

PARIS, Aug. 28 (NYT) .- Contrary to a generally held view, oil production cutbacks in the Middle East may actually be tending to lower-or at least to check the increase of-petroleum prices in the consumer countries, industry sources reported yesterday.

Reduced output in Kuwait and Qatar, the sources said, has already had the effect of lowering company costs by as much as 60 cents a barrel. The production cuts will reduce the current glut of oft on world markets and keep DJ).—The West German banking association said today that the collapse of four banks within tha output in line with demand.

It is not clear yet what the situation will be with the cutback just announced in Sandi Arabia, but one industry analyst suggests that a new pattern may be emerging in the complex oil price picture in the Middle East that will permit reduced costs for oil while leaving the overall price structure unchanged.

Fact-Saving Move

In this way neither producing countries, which feel price de-clines are unjustified, nor consumer countries, particularly the United States, which have been pushing for lower prices, would

British Airways Net Trebles, but

Outlook Said Dim LONDON, Ang. 28 (AP-DJ) .--The state-owned British Airways reported today it more than trebled its profits last year but said it faces a loss of up to £20 million in the year ending March

Net profits jumped to £18.8 million in the 1973-74 year from £5.2 million the previous year.

The forecast of a loss in the current year came from chairman David Nicholson, who told newsmen that the airline plans to meet the delicit by drawing on reserves and possibly by seeking an increase in capital.

Mr. Nicholson said the company had discussed the expected lo with the government and had sought permission to use more flexibility in its operations to cope with the problem.

He said the government would probably anthorize this flexibility. which would include borrowing abroad and leasing aircraft.

In its financial report British Alreays cited rising fuel and wage costs for the expected loss this year.

Report of Kuwait Investment In British Bonds Is Denied

LONDON, Aug. 28 (Reuters).-Reports that Kuwait intends to invest £750 million in British government securities are false, authoritative British sources said today.

The sources also denied reports that a series of international standby credits for Britain are being negotiated between tha British government and certain Arab oil exporters.

There have been no discussions between the British government and Kuwait or any other Arab states concerning the provision by them of any standby credit or other financial assistance to Britain, the sources added,

However, they noted that Kuwait and other Arab states have been purchasers of gilt-edged as well as other securities in the London market from time to time, and will no doubt con-timue to do so." Such transactions are purely commercial and have not been the subject of any official understandings or any special terms, the sources stressed

Bankers here note that the currency mix chosen by Kuwait for its oil payments gives no clue as to what currency it will opt to hold as an investment vehicle. These sources point out that if, as seems likely. Knwait spreads its investment risk by a partial Kuwait's sterling receipts are continuing to rise substantially in line with the higher oil price, but no longer represent nearly 100 per cent of its oil revenues, informed financial sources report.

More than 60 per cent of its total oil payments are in sterling and the remainder is in dollars, the sources said

The equity oil, which the Western companies extract on their own behalf, is still being paid for in sterling at the equivalent of just over $7 per barrel. This represents 40 per cent of Kuwait's current output of a little under two million barrels a day, or 100 million tons at an annual rate.

Kuwaith participation oil, renresenting 60 per cent of output. has since the beginning of this year been paid for in a mix of sterling and dollars, the sources said. Knwait recently agreed to a price of $10.85 a barrel for its participation oil for the first five months of the year and $10.95 thereafter.

The sterling element probably accounts for between a half and two-thirds of this government oil which is sold direct to companies lika British Petroleum and Gulf

The balance has been paid for in dollars following the delayed, but retroactive, price agreement for Kuwaiti government oil reached with BP and Gulf,

Recent reports that Kuwait was switching investment out of ster-ling and into dollars stem from the payment by the two companies for the very large balance of what was owed for the first six months of this year, the sources said.

These very substantial payments. made about three weeks ago, were in dollars and amounted to between $600 million and $750 million for each of the two companies, the sources said.

GE Reveals Nuclear Fuel Unit a Failure

Says It May Decide To Abandon Project

NEW YORK, Aug. 28 (AP-DJ). --General Electric, a technologi-cal leader in the nuclear energy business, recently admitted to the Atomic Energy Commission that it cannot get a nuclear facility to work, and that extensive rebuilding or even abandonment are possible.

In what science magazine refers to as "one of the more spec-tacular failures of the nuclear age," GE's nuclear division, which has been trying for the last six years to bring into operation its fuel recovery plant near Chicago -and spending $64 million in the process—told the AEC that the advanced technology used in the plant just does not work.

GE said it may have to spend another $90 million to $130 million and take four more years to redesign and rebuild the plant. A spokesman added that based on a full study of the project currently under way, GE could decide the plant cannot be salvaged and should be scrapped.

The plant, which was to take spent uranium fuel pellets from nuclear electric power plants, re-move radioactive wastes, and return new fuel to the utilities, had been scheduled to start operating in mid-1970, but was delayed several times before GE finally admitted defeat. There are no other fuel recovery plants in

This means there could be a shortage of space to store spent fuel until other reprocessors begin commercial operations. And, some experts contend, it could result in an increase in the rost of nuclear fuel and higher electric rates because ntilitles were expecting to use reprocessed nu-clear fuel instead of totally relying on new, and more expensive,

The GE recovery plant was small—only 330 tons of annual capacity compared with other reprocessing plants scheduled to come on stream later in the decade. And the shortage of fuel recovery caused by the problem is not expected to cause critical

"If nuclear plants come on stream as they're supposed to, there will be a demand greater than the capacity," says one expert. Utilities will have to carry larger inventories of uranium fuel, and spent fuel may have to wait for years before it is reprocessed, thus increasing costs for the utilities, he says.

Leading Index Up in U.S. in July

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28 (AP).

The government's measure of future trends in the economy rebounded in July on the strength of an improved job picture and labor costs, the Commerce Department reported today.

Its index of leading indicators pushed up by 1.8 per cent over June, when the index recorded its only drop so far this year, 2 0.6 per cent decline, revised from the preliminary 0.4 per cent drop reported a month ago.

The Commerce Department said the strongest upward pressure came from the cost of labor involved in production. The pricelabor cost ratio improved by 3 per cent in July, meaning $10 worth of labor produced $11.79 worth of goods, compared to $11.36 in June.

New claims for unemployment

In his first news conference, Mr. Ford flatly ruled out any new wege and price controls. He said initial steps for dealing with in-flation would be in fiscal policy, promising less spending in the current fiscal year than the amount budgeted.

Iflewhome Pan Am.

Joseph C. Raho, Glen Ridge, New Jersey
"Pan Am has a wealth of experience behind them. I like the idea of travelling on an American airline.

There's a charm to foreign-speaking airlines, but there's an at-home feeling in an American atmosphere."

The Story of a Coal Miner By George Vecsey. Saturday Review Press. 247 pp. $7.95.

Reviewed by A.H. Raskin

constant companions of the men who go underground every day to mine the world's coal. Their lives are spent playing tagwith disaster-s roof fall, an explosion in the bowels of a mountain or just the slow rot of their lungs from coal dust ill they turn into black sponge. And the land above them once all timber-covered hills and valleys of incredible beauty, is now a giant slag heap made drearier still by the ravages of 10-story-high stripping ma-

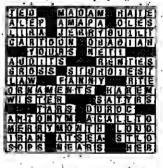

These things help make miners everywhere a fractious breed. their view of society as gloomy as the Stygian shafts in which they dig. In Britain it was the miners who defied wage restraints and toppled the Tory government early this year. In France it was the miners who humbled the fron-willed Charles de Gaulle at the height of his power. And if President Ford—Mr. Nice Guy of 1974 runs into trouble with labor in his efforts to build a united front against inflation, the place that trouble almost certhinly will start will be the coal-mines when the United Mine Workers' contracts run out this fall. After all, the miners did not hesitate to strike in World War II when all the rest of labor was adhering to a no-strike pledge and when the patron saint of the New Deal Franklin D. Roosevelt.

was in the White House. Why miners are like that is likely to be a lot clearer to you after you read this book about Dan Sizemore, a nightshift foreman in a southwest Virginia mine. whose father was a mine foreman before him and who has himself worked underground in Appalachia for 36 years. Mr. Sisemore is a most unusual miner, even by the unusual standards that are normal in a coal patch, but that-doesn't keep him from being an admirable guide-in George Vecsey's words ."a valuable closedcircuit camera, planted in one of the darkest, dirtiest tunnels of American life."

Mr. Vecsey, a reporter for The. New York Times, met Dan Sizemore while covering a .UMWstrike in Appalachia four years in 1936, vowing he would be a tough coal boss like his daddy. He was going to rise in the com-pany and move more coal than any boss had ever moved. He did just that and any miner who didn't meet the pace was soon an ex-miner in a one-industry region. The hig bosses kept pushing Mr. Sizemore abead. "They recognized hardness, callousness," He was the exact type of bullyboy they were looking for, he used to

Dan Sizemore went on that way for more than two decades, then got the heave-ho himself-victim of "Tke's recession" in 1958, plus a little back-stabbing by some of his fellow foremen. He didn't worry at first. He could still move coal better than any man who ever lived. The -conceit evaporated under a long spell of unemployment so long that Dan Sizemore his wife and seven bossing it again, his values had begun a slow change that turned him into a social activist, a rebel filled with despair about "the system" and its brutalization of the miners. Has this access of concern for the exploited and the excluded, this inveighing against the ains of industry, union and government, made him a popular hero? Just the reverse: The whole Sizemore family has been cast into outer darkness by most of the tight little community around them. Part of it is that they have two sons who moved to Toronto to escape the Vietnam draft, an even bigger part that they gave shelter one week to a young black friend of their absent sons a kindness that prompted two members of Mr. Sizemore's crew to lead him into an ambush for pistol-whipping by a bigoted deputy sheriff.

The worth of this illuminating book is not primarily in Dan Size more's mountaineer Marxism with its ninflistic estimates of the morality of the mine operators.
Virtually every indictment he makes of the coal barons for greed and inhumanity was made far more eloquently a generation ago by John L. Lewis, that flaw ed but still majestic builder of the UMW. The book's more useful contribution is in the vividness with which it portrays the anxieties and the cameraderie inside a mine—the havor that a faulty wire can cause the swift alternation of laughter and tragedy, the miscarriage of safety rules and through it all the unceasing pressure to move the coal. Little wonder that sometimes Dan Sizemore likes to get drank on wine or home brew. "It's good to get dumbed out once in a while," he told Mr. Vecsey io his titchen on their last day to-gether. Look I make coal mining sound so damn exciting, but let's face it we're all terrified every time we go over to that place."

Skillfully interlaced with Mr. Vecsey's intimate picture of the mine that Mr. Sizemore fears. working for a management be despises, is a depressing over-view of Appaiachia and its wreckage, both human and ecological. There is the mine town, with the only black in Mr. Sizemore's chift obliged to live in the "colored hollow scross the valley sur-rounded by religious images and moonshine. And there is the despoliation of the region by the strippers — instant millionaires. with the connivance of judges who come into court to interpret. the law, their boots still muddy from a morning of surveying their: own strip-mining operations. In-structive, too, is Mr. Vecsey's rundown of the successful rank-andfile insurrection in the UMW after --Yablonski had ended his personal challenge of the pethy lygitus who inherited the Lewis scepter.

If the militant new leadership in the mine union does call a nationwide strike this November. Dan Sizemore won't go out with the rest of the miners. He is out slready and so is his whole crew. A month after this book was finished all 175 men at their mine got pink slips telling them it was being closed because of "economic conditions." At 55 he can't pass: the medical examination for a job at any other mine. -He has second-stage black lung another discard on the slag heap of Appalachia.

A.H. Raskin is on The New York Times editorial board.

BRIDGE

If you are looking for a pas-sive lead against a high-level contract, a lead from a queen or a jack is generally slightly safer than a lead from a king. The reason is that a lead from a minor honor may give up a trick that the defense would never have made in any event, But if a king is a potential trick, there may be less that the declarer can do to neutralize it. .. West had this problem on the diagramed deal from the Spingold knockout team championship held recently in New York. He had to defend against a contract of six spades after North opened the bidding with one diamond But this bid was suspect, since North-South using a modern version of the Precision System, in which one diamond is bid on a wide variety of hands.

bidding followed netural lines. South showed a big hand and, after he was raised used Black-wood before settling in six ashera

West had no hesitation in rejecting the singleton spade lead. which would have solved all the declarer's problems immediately. As can be seen, a diamond lead would have given South no help at all the slam would have depended entirely on South's play of the spade suit which would have been a guess.

West's actual decision to lead a heart from the king does not appear fatal at first glance, but in fact it gave the declarer an opportunity for a good play, By taking a slight risk, he was able to reach a position in which the contract became a certainty.

The first trick was won in dummy with the heart queen, and a spade was led to the king. three diamond winners

- By Alan Truscott were taken, ending in the drin

my. If either defender had been able to ruff, South would probably have been in jeopardy. If the ruff was by West and he didnot have the outstanding trump; he would have been endplayed. If not, South would have had to rely on a finesse in hearts or clubs.

When both defenders followed to three diamonds, South knew his slam was safe. He led the spade jack and finessed. As, if happened, this won, and the trump problem was solved. If it had lost to the queen, West would have been end-played and forced to give the declarer a vital

And finally, if East had failed to follow on the second spade lead, South would have won in his hand and played a third spade, again forcing West to . Thereafter, the North-South make a heipful return and de cide the issue.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.-The ammediate question which 7-footer Moses Malone : must answer is: What is more important, a million dollars or so or a college education?

Malone, a high school superstar whn was recruited by the University of Maryland, was prepared yesterday to rkip campus life for a multi-million-dollar contract with tha Utah Stars of the American Basketball Association But today, he canceled his trip to New York for the signing and then said: "I really don't know what I'm going to do."

A Stars spokesmen said: "Our position is that we've offered him a fair contract and the final decision is up to hlm."

The original contract which the Stars offered was for Maline to receive $400,000 ever the next four years, plus $90,-000 more in benefits, including bonuses, a house, a $500 monthly stipend for his. mother, and a car.

Malone must make his decision as soon ae possible as cideses started today at the University of Maryland.

Australia Sails Into Final Round

NEWPORT, RL, Aug. 28 (UPI). — Australia's Southern Cross sailed into the America's Cup finals today by defeating the France for the fourth straight time. Today's victory: was as. easy as the previous three, with the final margin being 4 minutes seconds.

That ended the best-of-seven series and now the new aluminum-hulled 12-meter yacht will meet the American defender starting Sept. 10.

In the U.S. trials, the old champion, intrepid, which suc-1970, beat Courageous today for the second consecutive day, this time by 52 seconds. The victory made it almost certain that these trials would continue to the limit, which is Sept. 3, when the selection must be made by the New York Yacht Club.

Prench skipper Jean-Marie Le Guillou won the start from Jim Hardy of Southern Oross again, getting across the line two seconds ahead, but was unable to hold that advantage. The first leg of the six-leg 24.3-mile course always is unwind, and the French admit that Southern Cross simply is a faster boat in windward

Redskins Reach Their Limit With Thomas and Cut Runner

CARLISLE, Pa., Aug. 28 (WP); Duane Thomas, running back of the Washington Redskins, was released yesterday after a verbal and physical altercation with assistant coach Charile Waller.

Coach George Allen said waivers today.

Before leaving the players' domnitory at Dickinson College here, where the Redskins are conducting their presenson training. Thomas said, "It was a personality conflict. I'd rather not talk about it now."

"I don't want to have to leave," he added softly. Nevertheless, just as his teammates were taking the field for practice yesterday, Redskin equipment manager Tommy McVean drove Thomas to Harrisburg (Pa.), International Airport, and Thomas was on his way home, his off-again, on-again football carrer once again in jeopardy.

"I just feel sorry for him," said Waller, who coaches the running backs. "He came in and did everything so well."

Facts of the altercation Monday night with Waller were pleced together from conversations with Thomas Waller and Redskin players who were present.

Because of a virus infection, Thomas missed the regular team meeting Sunday evening in which films of Saturday night's preseason game with Cleveland were shours.

"He was excused from that because of his illness, and I arranged for him to see the film Monday after lunch." Waller said, but he didn't show up. I assumed it was because he wasn't feeling well again, so I let it go." Thomas was also excused from

Monday afternoon's workout by Allen but went anyway, telling a teammate he wanted to practice. After the usual team meeting Minday night, the running backs

The French praised the Southern Cross as a very fast boat which will be a real threat to the New York Yacht Club, which never has lost the America's Cup. This will be the 22d challenge since the first in 1831. Brnno Bich, spokesman for the French, offered to stay here and. sail the France as a trial boat for the Australians as they prepared for cup racing. In Intrepid's victory, skipper

Gerry Driscoll beat Dennis Conat the start and rode that advantage to a 52-second final margin.

Intrepid was on the verge of elimination after losing to Courageous Sunday. But Driscoll and his crew fought back after a day of rest Monday to win two straight with the aid of a new mainsail, Courageous now has won four races and Intrepid three in their head-to-head racing, but the New York Yacht Club will make the choice on an merall basis, not only on won-lost records.

Harness Racing: Sport of the Poor People

By Joseph Durso

DU QUOIN, Ill., Aug. 28 (NYT).-He probably didn't say it at the breakfast table, and he certainly didn't have the Hambletonian trot in mind, but Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes was striking a blow for the poor people in aports 110 years ego. Thet was before they had parimutuel machines, but Holmcs still saw critical differences between horses and trotting hoses, besides their gait.

"Horse racing." he wrote. "is not a republican institution: borse trotting is. Now just compare the racer with the trotter for a moment. The racer is incidentally useful but essentially something to bet upon. The trotter is essentially and daily useful, and only incidentally a tool for sporting men,

"Wherever the trotting horse goes, he carries in his train brisk omnibuses, lively baker'a carts and therefore hot rolls. the joby butcher's wagon, the cheerful gig the wholesome afternoon drive with wife and cblld-all the forms of moraf excellence except truth, which does not agree with any kind of borseflesh. The racer brings with him gambling, cursing, swearing, drinking, the eating of oysters and a distaste for moband the middle-aged virtues.

Out here in the corn country of southern Illinois this week, sporting men are turning their backs on all that cursing, swearing and gambling. Let the thoroughored folks eat ovsters at beautiful Belmont Park in New York. It's time again for the main event of harness racing the 49th Hambletonian. No betting allowed, no live television, an Sports Kings. Just one mile to a decision in four heats with all those middle-aged virtues and a purse of $160,000 besides.

The race had been scheduled for today but rain forced a postponement to tomorrow. To hear the trotting people tell it, only paupers need apply. The candidates for the big race at the Illinois State Fair Grounda include Golden Sovereign, sold for a mere $8.000 as a yearling: Anvil, who fetched twice that much: Spliffire Hanover, once owned by Delvin Miller and Whitey Ford. Nevale Diamond, who went lame a year ago; Christopher T., bred by a pharmacist from Mankato, Minn., and Buckeye Count, hred by an auto dealer from Washington Courthouse. Ohio.

"Thoroughhreds," reflected Del Miller, one of the big wheels of the sulky business, "don't get the nitty-gritty element we do. I don't think a trainer ever made the hierarchy in places like New York. The owners here are closer to our game-they jog, they train, they drive.

Don't think, though, that the first farmers of trotting are un-tainted by money. Last year's Hambo was won by Flirth. owned by E. Roland Harriman and Elbridge T. Gerry, the landed aristocrats. The governor of Illinois, to keep the race here, is collecting cash from the parimutuel tracks around the state. And next year's classic will be switched to e Saturday with live television and a purse of $200,000. Even Oliver Wendell Holmes might raise an eyebrow mer that.

LOS ANGELES.-A stolen base by Lou Brock seems deceptively effortless, compared with those by his most famous predecessors.

Ty Cobb terrified infleiders with a blood-and-thunder slide and slashing spikes which he sharpened himself. Maury Wills did it with faucy feiors and a sense of showmanship that had Dodger Stadium crowds wildly chanting, "Go! . . . Go! . Go!"

And Louis Clark Brock? Well, he steals bases for the St. Louis Cardinals with the delicate touch easily. With 89 stolen bases Brock is winning a footrace with baseball history in quest of Wills' singleseason record of 104. His style is unconventional. Standing there elmost motionless, eyes riveted on the pitcher. Brock doesn't take a particularly adventageous lead off first basemaybe five feet or so. At 35, he is not baseball's fastest man and he is admittedly "about two steps slower" than in years when he stole fewer bases. And his slide into second and third bases is so abhreviated that it is hardly a slide at all.

"I'm the guy who dereloped the no-silde." said Brock, with a twinkle in his eye "I never really learned to slide properly." In fact, he got e memo from a former boss, general manager Bob Howsman, when he joined the Cardinals in a trade from the Chicago Cubs to 1964. "All it said." Brock recalled "was

Moving Day For Hirshhorn's Sculpture

By Paul Richard

GREENWICH, Conn. (WP).—Al Lerner, the director of the new Hirshhorn Museum and Sculpture Garden, took one step backward, then another, but Joseph Hirshhorn didn't hodge as he stood in the rose garden of his Greenwich mansion. Rose petals and leaves flew about him in a helicopter's down draft.

A tense moment. A dozen movers, all previously stolid, screamed into their radios and waved their arms at one another.

The Sikorsky S-8, a deafeningly loud machine, hovered above them. A 70-foot cable was suspended from its belly. At the cable's other end a 12-foot piece of bronze sculpture, 1,200 pounds in weight, was spinning uncontrollably.

Earlier, a Hepworth and the Henry Moores and a dozen other weighty statues on Mr. Hirshhorn's estate had been lifted from their pedestals to trucks without a trace of trouble, but now Giacomo Manzu's "Monumental Standing Cardinal," a cinch of nylon webbing strapped around its waist, was rotating in the down draft with

The cardinal is twice as tall as life, and perhaps eight times as heavy. His heavy base is club-hlunt; his metal mitre is pointed, and the movers kept their distance, until John Reatch, the hellcopter pllot, stopped the cardinal's spinning hy lowering him, face first, into the green grass of the lawn.

The cardinal is bound for Washington. By the first week in October, the cardinal and a hundred other statues comparably monumental will be standing outdoors on the Mall.

Mr. Hirshhorn, 75, a Latvian-born selfmade man, has as many statues as any man alive. The best of them, 2,000 works (and twice that many paintings) were given to the United States in 1966.

The new museum that will house them is already full of paintings taken from his warehouses and offices and homes. "Fiftyfive van loads of art already have arrived in Washiogton" said Al Lerner, "Without a scratch.

Later, with the cardinal resting upon a flat-bed truck. Al Lerner was smiling, "And here's the man who did it," he said, introducing Edward Monserrate.

Edward Monserrate, 37, is a vicc-presideot of Hahn Brothers Movers. He wears, as do his employees, a well-pressed dusky orange jump suit that he describes as "gold." Mr. Monserrate, who specializes in the transportation of art works and computers, figures he's "responsible for getting between 500,000 and 600,000 pounds of Hirshhorn art to Washington, D.C."

For the past 14 years, most of the tonnage has been standing on the grounds of Hirshhorn's Greenwich home. It is palatial, with stained-glass windows, turrets and extraordinary views.

"This is one of the highest hills between Boston and New York," said Mrs. Birsh-"On a clear night you can see the lights of Shea Stadium."

The reporters who showed up had not come for the views. Nor had the 100 000 visitors who have climbed that drive during the past decade. They had come to see the statues that line the drive, that dot

Mr. Hirshhorn's sculpture collection has been described as "unrivalled in its completeness and quality" hy Sir Herbert Read. It is still too soon to say how those statues will appear installed at the Mall lo Washington, but they were stunning here. "Joe likes to see his sculptures fit into a laodscape," said Jay Rogers, a Hirshhorn employee. "See them in winter under snow, or in springtime, surrounded by new flowers, or against a summer sunset, and each time they look different. They almost seem alive."

"Once, during an interview," said Al Lerner, "Joe was asked a question. 'What is it like, Mr. Hirshhorn, to wake up in the morning, brush your teeth and look out of your window at Rodin's monumental Burghers of Calais"? What does it really 'What does it feel like?' answered. 'Why, it feels terrific!' " strain," said Al Lerner. "Moving all these things, uprooting all these statues after all these years." "It feels terrific," said Mr. Hirshhorn.

"Joe's under a tremendous emotional

"These things don't belong to me, to one family, one man. Everyone should see them. They're going to a good home. I doo't feel bad at all."

Mr. Hirshhorn had been watching the helicopter work all morning. "The King and Queeo" by Henry Moore (120 pounds) had been lifted from its pedestal and placed upon a truck. Then Marino Marioi's "Horse and Rider" (1,110 pounds) had been carried through the air.

"Lunch time," Mr. Hirshhorn yelled. Pitchers full of coffee and iced tea appeared upon the patio. The movers, reporters and photographers gobbled little sandwiches made with crustless bread. The butler passed a silver tray heaped with brownies. The helicopter had landed behind a stand of trees.

"Work time," Mr. Hirshhorn said. A sudden commotion. Policemen on the scene. The helicopter pilot had left his craft unguarded and his walkie-talkie bad been stolen during lunch.

But half an hour later, another radio borrowed, the craft was in the air again lifting Rodin's "Balzac" from its pedestal beside the drive.

Answering a question, the pilot, John Reatch of the Keystone Helicopter Corp. West Chester, Pa., had disappointed a reporter by saying, oo, he didn't think ha could call the Hirshhorn job his most difflcult assignment ever. "But it's not easy,"

Hovering is always difficult, he said, and the grounds were full of trees, and the trucks were dense with sculptures. Mr. Reatch, who usually lifts lengths of structural steel and air conditioning units, said hauling things long distances is easy, but be'd been hired only to lift Mr. Hirshhorn's sculptures from pedestal to truck.

The Calders and the Henry Moores, the David Smiths and Rodins will start arriving in Washington tomorrow.

Standing there, his hands behind his back, Mr. Hirshhorn looked slowly around his naked lawns and gardens. "I'm going to make a phone call to ses if the real world is still out there," he said. Mi. Hirshhorn turned and walked toward his mansion. "He has to use the telephone," Mrs. Hirshhorn said. "Moving art is so expensive, he's gone to see if he can pay for all of this."

bare-breasted sunbathing, an ordinance more honored in the breach than in the observance. Now comes word from Capitola, Calif, that the city council has voted for it. Not for nudity, of course. In the new ordinance nudity is expressly forbidden but, as the city attorney said, "You can solve a lot of legal problems by leaving breasts out of our ordinance." And so they did. But Capitola is in Santa Cruz County and the county supervisors aren't entirely satisfied with the new ordinance. Everyone agrees that bare bottoms are out. But the supervisors want a legal ruling on breasts. Supervisor Henry Mellow says female breasts should be covered County Counsel Howard Gowthrop said this could be discriminatory without a provi-sion for males. "I'd hate to have to wear a bra on the beaches," supervisor Phil Harry admitted.

James Meredith sald Tuesday that he plans to file a suit in an attempt to get his name on tha ballot as an independent candidate in the 4th Congressional District elections in Jackson, Miss. Meredith led a five-way field in the June 4 Democratic primary but pulled out of the runoff election because he was denied permission by the state election commission to run as an independent. Meredith, who in 1963 became the first black to enroll at the University of Mississippi, withdrew from the primary to run as an independent in the hope of taking advantage of a split in the white vote.

A lawyer representing Otto Kerner said that the former governor of Illinois and former federal judge, now in federal prison in Lexington, Ky., will seek parole in October, Thomas Patton, a Washington attorney, said that although Kerner only began serving his term on July 29, he is entitled to a parole hearing because of a unique aspect of his sentence. When federal Judge Robert Taylor sentenced Kerner after his conviction on charges of mail fraud, conspiracy, perjury and income tax evasion, he stip-
